St. Helena has always been noted for having a population of strong individuals and the subject of this article was certainly no exception.

Hannah Emily Weinberger, shown here on her 80th birthday in 1920 was born in 1840 in New Albany, Indiana. Her parents were John H. and Dorothea (Kloening) Rabbe, both born in Hanover, Germany. After immigrating to the United States, they finally settled in Cincinnati, Ohio, where John became a merchant. In 1871, Hannah became the second wife of John C. Weinberger, who's first wife, Mary, had died in 1866. Along with her own children, Hannah also helped to raise Anna and John's daughter, Minnie.

Originally, a German candy maker, John Weinberger fell in love with California and St. Helena after a trip in 1869. After their marriage, the couple came to St. Helena where they bought 240 acres just north of the town. Originally, described as "a wild piece of land," the property was located on the west side of the highway, across from today’s Markham Winery. In the next 6 years, they cleared the land, planted grapes, among them Zinfandel, and built both a winery and a house with formal gardens. The winery remains today as a private residence.

Along with making wine, John also introduced the making of grape syrup to St. Helena. Early on, he discovered a ready market for this product, which many people claimed to prefer to maple syrup. Three gallons of grape juice produced about one gallon of syrup. While saddened by the deaths of daughters, Emily, 2 1/2 and Mary, 6, all in all, life seemed to hold great promise for the Weinberger family. The winery and syrup businesses were expanding and doing well. Their 3 surviving children were healthy and growing.

Active in community life, John helped organize the Bank of St. Helena, served on the County Grand Jury and belonged to many local civic organizations. These included the Masons, St. Helena Viticulture Club, and the Grange. Hannah was active in the Presbyterian Church, which gave her a great deal of pleasure.

Life changed tragically on Tuesday, March 21, 1882. John received a telegram asking him to meet a friend at the Lodi Station. When the train arrived, he was met, not by his friend, but by a former employee, William J. Gau. Gau had fallen in love with Minnie Weinberger, who had no desire to encourage his love. Fired from his job at the winery, he even followed Minnie when she went to stay with a relative "back East." His actions there completely destroyed whatever feelings she might ever have had for him. When she returned to St. Helena, again, he followed her, shifting his anger over to John, whom he believed had forbidden her to marry him. Gau continued to brood, making threats against both John and the family, which, unfortunately, were ignored. Getting off the train, Gau called out to John, who ignored him and, wishing to avoid a confrontation, began walking away. Gau drew his gun, shot John twice in the head, killing him and then shot himself. One man on the train platform, L. P. Castner had tried to call out a warning, but train noises drowned out his voice.

The entire town attended John's funeral. Several different church choirs sang at the services performed by Rev. Mitchell. Over a mile long, the funeral procession took over an hour to go through St. Helena. In contrast, Gau's body remained unclaimed and was eventually buried in a pauper's grave by the city.

After the death of her husband, Hannah took over operation of the winery and vineyards, possibly becoming the first woman winemaker in Napa County. A capable organizer, she also assumed her husband's seat as a director of the Bank of St. Helena. When the Women's Improvement Club was organized in 1905, Hannah was asked by the other members to serve as its first president, which she did. It was felt by many that the early success of this group was due in large part to her leadership. In May, 1931, in failing health, Hannah died quietly in her home, at the age of 90. People remembered her many contributions to the community, and noted how much she would be missed.

RESIDENT’S MESSAGE

Your volunteers have been busy planning for the society far into the future. We are now members of the American Association of Museums (AAM). St. Helena Historical Society member and professional organizational development consultant Tricia Westbrook, volunteers her time with the Society putting policies and procedures in place that are consistent with accepted standards of museum management in America. AAM has given us model codes of ethics, collections policies, job descriptions, etc. Early on we decided that our collecting area would be the St. Helena School District boundaries at the time the St. Helena Historical Society was formed. But which types of items will we collect? A collections policy is necessary to formalize and guide our activities. Part of the procedures is the new Collections Ledger and Registration System, which registers each artifact as it is donated to us. We are the envy of the Napa County Historical Society, who wishes they had an operational plan such as ours at the beginning of their existence.

We are seriously considering that the best way for us to accomplish our mission will be to evolve into a local, historical museum. As we develop the society, we are establishing a framework that will allow us to do that if and when the time is right. Our activities now are foundation for this exciting effort and we hope that many of you will join us in this work!

There are two important functions that our group needs members to volunteer for: membership and marketing. We need two or more volunteers to take over these positions.

Membership involves processing new member forms and maintaining a current list of all members. We have software program for this and training is available. It also includes leading a Membership Committee in promoting the society by mailing membership materials and staffing a table at events. It’s a great way to meet new people and introduce them to the society.

The marketing volunteer will be our liaison to the media: newspapers, magazines, radio, etc. When events are planned this person works with the fundraising committee to attract attendees. If you have enthusiasm, good writing skills and are willing to learn basic marketing skills, you could be a great help to the society!

Our Board of Directors will hold the annual meeting, as required by our bylaws, on May 3. During that meeting we entertain nominations for prospective board members. Any is eligible to be nominated to the board. Board members sign a conflict of interest disclosure statement to ensure their private collecting activities don’t pose an ethical quandary for the society. Please contact me at 963-5748 if you are interested.

Our next event promises to be a beautiful afternoon at one of St. Helena’s most historic estates: the Vine & Fig Tree Farm on Sulphur Springs Road. Victorian High Tea will be served on Saturday, June 26 from 3-5pm. Hats will be worn. A limited number of guests can be accommodated, so we suggest sending in your reservation early using the form in this newsletter. Members and their guests have priority.

Discover Hidden Treasures of the Valley

The second annual “Discover Hidden Treasures of the Valley” antiques event was staged by the society on February 22 at the Native Sons Hall. The new venue was very popular among the dealers who came to evaluate antiques, as well as the guests who brought their treasures. There were 9 dealers evaluating and 2 trades giving repair estimates. Artistry in Gold saw and cleaned many fine pieces of jewelry. Antiques on Second brought her collection of teddy bears and dolls. Restoration Studio showed how they can piece together a ceramic piece from small fragments. Jan’s Cane worked on re caning a chair and explained the process. In addition, there was a silent auction of collectibles, wine and antiques. A feast of sweet and savory goodies awaited in the smaller room, as well as wine, coffee and tea. Everyone was very pleased with the turnout, guests were happy to learn about their heirlooms and a good time was had by all. The third annual “Discover Hidden Treasures” will be on February 20, 2005 at the Native Sons Hall.

Ladies and Gentlemen, mark your calendars, and Join us for a gracious repast.
